

Hello Boss,

This is my project report on the rootbeer project. Using the GitHub API, I have collected data on the team's contributions. Over the course of the past 300 weeks, we have had numerous changes to the code. As you can see in the chart above, there are a few colors that appear consistently, as well as a few that appear only occasionally. The more prominent contributors are Scott Alexander-Bown and Matthew Rollings, so I would consider them vital members of the team and essential to the project's success. On the other hand, people like vyas and leocadiotine have only contributed once, thus I would have no qualms about letting them go. I see that Daniel Kutick has been working on testing files, such as RootBeerTest.java and ApplicationTest.java, which is an important step in code development. Throughout this report, I have used git blame to track who had made what changes, which was useful to see what kinds of contributions each person made.
